Description The book analyzes in detail the modus operandi and online communication of over 1500 Violent Protest Groups (terrorist, racist, extremist organizations, etc.). The book examines the use that these Violent Protest Groups make of the ICT mediums, illustrating possible future developments and implications in terms of issues such as security, privacy and the right to freedom of expression. Moreover, the modus operandi of the Protest & Terrorist Groups on the Internet is described in depth, analyzing their communication tools and methods, their strategic and logistic approach, and the support that ICT technologies offer them in terms of propaganda, proselytizing and motivation. Various international Governmental and non Governmental bodies and institutions, such as the Simon Wiesenthal Center, have collaborated on the study.
